Bo-Kaap – About the Neighbourhood

The Bo-Kaap is one of Cape Town's most distinct neighbourhoods known for its vibrant, predominantly Muslim, Cape Malay community and its equally bold flat-roofed colourful houses and cobbled stone roads. Situated at the foot of Signal Hill, on the fringe of the city centre, and formerly known as the Malay Quarter, the Bo-Kaap's origins date back to the 1760s when numerous "huurhuisjes" (rental houses) were built and leased to slaves and political exiles brought here from other Dutch colonies in the east including Indonesia's Batavia, Sumatra, Java and also East Africa. Most of these groups spoke some Malay, hence this new community becoming known as the Cape Malays.
